

Tardiness and Early Departure Policy

1. Definition of Tardiness

A student is considered tardy if they arrive to a class session more than 10 minutes after the scheduled start time. Students who arrive between 1 and 10 minutes late are considered late but not tardy for the purposes of this policy, though instructors may close doors or restrict entry at their discretion.

2. Early Departure

Leaving class before the session concludes without the prior permission of the instructor constitutes an early departure and is treated identically to a tardiness mark. Exceptions include genuine emergencies, for which the student must notify the instructor as soon as practicable.

3. Impact on Attendance

Three instances of tardiness or early departure (combined) in a single course are treated as one unexcused absence for the purposes of the Class Attendance Policy (ACAD-ATT-001). Instructors maintain discretion to impose stricter standards in professional program courses (nursing, education, business) where punctuality is a program learning outcome, provided these standards are clearly disclosed in the course syllabus.

4. Notification

When a student's tardy count reaches 2 in a semester, the instructor is required to send a written notification to the student and their academic advisor via the LMS attendance alert system.
